"I've been to many FASD conferences over the past decade and this was my favourite in regards to sessions. It was a nice balance, it wasn't too complex, but nor was it too simple."

Morning Plenaries

A woman with long dark hair is seated on a light-colored armchair on a stage, smiling and speaking into a microphone. She is wearing a black top with white lace-up details on the sleeves and a red pin on her lapel. The background is dark with a blue screen above her.

"This was truly career changing for me - I walked away with such a focus and a passion to bring my Territory to a place where those living with FASD have the right supports and are treated with respect and dignity. I've had to reflect a lot on what is current practice in light of what I learned is best practice. I am so grateful for evidence based research to use to show the proof of helping in a more trauma-informed, client-centered approach."

Think It's All Trauma? Think Again!

Wednesday October 22, 2025 at 8:30am

Moderated by Dr. Jacqueline Pei

Individuals with PAE disproportionately experience adversity and trauma. Yet our understandings of the impact of this adversity is lagging – which impacts our ability to implement effective, well timed and feasible intervention. In this presentation panelists will provide an overview of current work examining effects of adversity on individuals with PAE and FASD. Consideration for unexpected results, nuanced interpretation, and further inquiry will be provided. Ultimately the panel will identify future directions for the field and emphasize need for collaborative approaches that leverage shared initiatives and inform practices.

Navigating Self-Care and Recovery with the Pinkifying of Alcohol Marketing

Thursday October 23, 2025 at 10:30am

Moderated by Lindsay Wolfson

Sponsored by Health Nexus

Understanding the factors that contribute to alcohol use in pregnancy is important. While some factors associated with prenatal alcohol use include histories of substance use, trauma, or violence, other factors point to peer pressure, the normalization of alcohol and the ways in which the alcohol industry has increasingly targeted new products and marketing towards women. In this plenary presentation, internationally recognized researchers and women's health advocates will speak to how the alcohol industry has 'pinkified' products and how women have responded and even rejected these marketing tactics with their own movements that push towards low- or no-alcohol use or sobriety. The presenters will share empowering strategies for health promotion and self-care that support healthy pregnancies and healthy beginnings.
